'Nana, won't you kiss me?' but she replied 'No, I won't, at which he seemed to be much broken up.

'Sometimes Mr. Hates was unpleasantly demonstrative to his wife. In his demonstrations of affection, I mean," concluded Witness Shute.

Mr. Peckham's cross-examination of Shute brought out nothing new except that the luxurious Mr. Bates bought champagne for him one New Year's Day.

Day, Eugene McGrath, Annette's younger rother, came next.

Bates offered him a ride. He jumped in and on the way downtown Mr. Bates poured out the story of his undying love for adorable Annette, and confided to him that they were engaged to be married, asking him to tell the news to the rest of the children.

The morning of July 17, 1890, Eugene came upon his sister and Charlie Bates in the breakfast-room. Bates had remained over night at the McGrath home and he and Annette showed to the little brother a paper on which was written the agreement of marriage signed by Bates and Annette.

"Mr. Bates gave me a cigar. I took ment of marriage signed by bates and Annette.

"Mr. Eates gave me a cigar. I took it, but I don't smoke. I congratulated him, and he said: "Thank you. Have a light?" testified Mr. Eugene.

The witness was dreadfully serious, and when the court audience tittered at this circumstantial statement, the young man's face took on an expression of pain. To all of this the defendant, who would not have to make up for the role of Dicken's "fat boy," listened stolidly, with the fat crook of his fat walking stick resting between fat lips just above the double chin that curied up chubbily nesseward.

Mr. Horwitz, counsel for Annette, read the letter. It was written by Bates on the letter-head of his Coach-Horse and Cab Company, of which he is the Presi-dent, and read as follows: "April 11, 1893.

The chapples and other friends of the chubby Bates beamed admiringly upon that swain, but incredulously at the idea of his being able to make a kneeling joint in his dreadfully short and awfully thick supports.

Mrs. McGrath said that when she protested against the unconventional marriage by contract, Bates swore before God that it was as binding as though a hundred priests had tied the knot.

Several checks, drawn by Bates, to the order of Annette F. McGrath, were produced. Mrs. McGrath admitted that the indorsements on them were those of her landlord, and that the checks had been used in payment of her rent.

Mrs. McGrath admitted that as a Catholic, she did not consider her daughter married.

The Court further rules that it is not the duty of the defendants to render an account to any particular certificate holder, but to wind up the affairs of the Trust in a well defined manner, as prescribed by the Trust agreements. There is nothing in the complaint of Rice, the Court says, to show that the defendants have failed to perform their duty imposed by the resolutions winding up its affairs.

demurrer of John D. Rockefeller and the other Directors of the Standard Oil Trust, to the complaint of George Riel, a certificate-holder, who made application for the judicial dissolution of the Trust and an accounting.

As the Trust is already being voluntarily dissolved, Justice Orien holds that Rice's certificate is subject to all the conditions of the agreements creating the Trust, one of which makes special reference to the mode of terminating the Trust.

The Court says these prescribed conditions were followed, and that it is therefore clear that Rice was bound by what was done.

Rice, the Court holds, was bound to avail himself of the scheme of distribution. To ignore the method adopted by the Trust and come directly into Court, was to ignore his former contract.

The Court further rules that it is not.

Mrs. Holt says that there was not an agreement in writing between herself and her brother, but that it was understood that when Dorrogh died, Mrs. Holt was to be well taken care of. She did not receive anything under her brother's will. She then sued Judge Fancher as executor for 18,000. The commission is directed to John Rhodes, British Minister at Aliepe, India, where Mrs. Smales now lives, to examine Mrs. Smales now lives, to examine Mrs. Swales, that she cared for her in her youth as if she was her own child, Questions were also asked relative to the legitimacy of Mrs. Swales as one of Darragh's children.

Counsellor Moore, who appeared for Mr. Forcher, said that all questions of this kind could do no good. It would only tend to humiliate Mrs. Smales, lites in the English colony at Allepe was small, and such questions denges to the British Minister, would greatly injure Mr. and Mrs. Smales.

He was quietly arrested a week ago and released on $10,000. This action was taken at the instance of his brothers, who feared he was about to flee from the city, but the charges are made by Edward Duffy, receiver of the Coleman Brewing Company.

Mr. Duffy's charges are that Coleman with the assistance of William D. Comstock, a saloon-keeper at 34 Cherry street, prepared a lot of wild-cat notes to the amount of $13,000, and places them in the West Side Bank, where they were used to redeem good notes of customers of the brewing companies.

The plan, as detailed in the charges, was that Comstock procured notes signed by hangers-on at his saloon, and furnished them to Coleman. He took them, it is charged, and when notes due his companies came due at the bank, filled in the signed notes and put them in the brink to his credit.

Only once, it appears, was suspicion aroused, that being when Coleman took a note of one Daniel Tobin had bought Comstock's saloon, and his rote was even better than Lynch's.

Accompanying Receiver Duffy's complaint is an affidavit from Comstock that, at the request of one Evans, a bookkeeper for Coleman, he procured a lot of blank notes and had no occupation or responsibility.

It is alleged in Receiver Duffy's affidavit that the good notes redeemed by putting the workless ones in the bank were siven to President Coleman's brother.

The first sang to be struck was a first that the good notes redeemed by putting the workless ones in the bank were siven to President Coleman's brother.
